I use XM Traffic everyday to get to and from work, in the Baltimore/Washington area. I leave at different times just about everyday, and that is why I use it, it's always on. Before I bought my XM I listened to regular radio and may here 1 possible 2(if I was stuck in traffic) updates each way. With XM I just turn it on and within a minute I know where to avoid, in order to travel back and forth from work, and anyone who lives in the D.C. area knows how much can change in 5 minutes, so a traffic update every 15-30 means nothing. Plus if your commute takes you from the DC area to the Baltimore area you have to use 2 different radio stations and hope you don't miss there ?traffic update? with XM I just flip up or down 1 channel and I have the whole scoop. I don't know why you would want to get rid of something that is useful to so many people.
